

Toi Tū Toi Ora: Contemporary Māori Art

Britomart Satellite Exhibition

Toi Tū Toi Ora: Contemporary Māori Art at Britomart is a collaboration between Auckland Art Gallery Toi o Tāmaki and the Britomart Arts Foundation. Four artists have been commissioned to create works to grace Britomart's nine blocks, forming a satellite exhibition that extends the magic of the Gallery's landmark show to the streets of downtown waterfront Auckland.

Use this map or pick up a printed guide and take your time to browse the works by Shane Cotton, Lonnie Hutchinson, Lyonel Grant (in collaboration with Tim Gruchy) and Charlotte Graham. We invite you to read extended interviews with each of the artists about their work at britomart.org. And we recommend a visit to Toi Tū Toi Ora: Contemporary Māori Art, at Auckland Art Gallery Toi o Tāmaki until May 2021.

- 1 Shane Cotton Maunga
A five-storey-high permanent installation by one of Aotearoa's most prominent artists. Excelsior House, corner of Customs Street East and Commerce Street
- 2 Lonnie Hutchinson Aroha ki te Ora
A six-panel installation in Galway Street that references the Kāi Tahu creation story. Opposite the entrance to The Hotel Britomart, 29 Galway Street
- 3 Charlotte Graham Te Hau Whakaora
A flag-based installation that brings the healing energy of the wind and the sea through Britomart. The flags are on Te Ara Tahuu (outside Ortolana), Takutai Square and in the Atrium on Takutai
- 4 Lyonel Grant and Tim Gruchy
SCOUT: Wawata Hōhonu
Artist Tim Gruchy created SCOUT, an artwork with an ever-changing array of motion graphics on a stack of LED screens, in 2012. Now he's collaborated with master carver Lyonel Grant to create new material for SCOUT for Toi Tū Toi Ora. Takutai Square
